TANK TRUCK ACCIDENT

What The Lethal Threat Meant

By E. J. McDonald

The incident at the airport on Monday afternoon in which a man was killed in a fuel tank truck, was an accident which happened during the course of a normal operation. The man who died was identified as John Chamberlain, a former employee of the airport. He was driving the truck which had been loaded with fuel for the airplanes at the airport.

The accident occurred when the truck was being refueled at the airport fueling station. The truck was parked near the airplane hangar where the fueling was taking place. Suddenly, there was an explosion and flames shot out of the fuel tank. The man, who was standing near the truck, was caught in the flames and was burned to death.

The fuel tanks on the truck were examined by fire officials and it was determined that the tank had been Recommendations for future operations.

Denaturing Our Culture

We have not the luxury of the citizens of New York City who can hide the truth of the facts. In New York City, the truth is covered up by the city officials. In Tucson, the truth is covered up by the city council. The city council will not admit that there is a problem. They will not admit that there is a fire hazard. They will not admit that there is a danger to the public.

But there is a difference. The city of New York City has a large population. In Tucson, the population is much smaller. The city council will not admit that there is a problem because they are afraid of the people. They are afraid of the people because they are afraid of the truth.
